About This Game

“The Lady” is an emotional 2D Surreal Puzzle Horror adventure.

The Lady is a surrealist emotional journey that takes The Lady through a series of fever dream hallucinations, while being at odds with inner struggles of anxiety and depression. She encounters multiple versions of herself throughout the game, unsure of which versions to trust. From the initial confusion, to all out anxiety that one would experience with panic disorder, it's all there for you to explore first hand through the eyes of The Lady.

The Gameplay Mechanics are inspired by classic SNES and Turbo Grafx16 type games. The gameplay difficulty is brutal, just like life itself.

The game is displayed in a “waist up” cinematic style, for a more personal experience. Gameplay features side-scrolling exploration, puzzle solving, retro arcade-style boss battles, and plays in letterbox full screen HD.

Phenomenal art and a killer soundtrack cannot hide the fact that this has really bad gameplay.

The Lady's gameplay is sliding slowly to the right, then to the left, then to the right. If you repeat this enough the world around the character eventually changes and introduces more hazards or a boss, for a clunky boss fight.

My cut-off for games is around the half hour mark: if you can't engage me in 30 minutes, you likely never will. But I was tired of this game within 10. Still, I kept going in an attempt to see if it earns its Mostly Positive rating. But the game never seemed to actually want to begin being good.

Its harsh difficulty rating doesn't help either. Let me clarify: the game is simple as you basically only slowly move from left to right, but because the controls are so slow everything seems to be on a delay, causing you to get hit by whatever obstacle you were trying to avoid. And after just a few hits it's game over, man.

Maybe the later levels are great, but since I can't even get past the first two without either dying (and the game closing on me) or me WANTING to shut the game off, I can't comment on them.. This is an art game, with emphasis on Art. What gameplay there is is borderline unplayable, but a bizarre and disturbing art style make it worth it. I recommend buying it for a dollar, finding a walkthrough to get through the unintuitive parts, and enjoying the dark, surreal horror of The Lady.. It was hard but not impossible, the art was swell, but it really didn't have a point to me. I initially bought the game because of the praise it had with showing what it's like to deal with mental illness, but as a mentally ill person myself I can say this game honestly just seemed to want to use mental illness as a guise to look weird and spooky. It's a very short game, maybe 20 minutes total if you play it straight through with no deaths. I wouldn't say it's worth it.. https://youtu.be/hilM8fsNX_M

Maybe I just don't get the message in games like this however this does not change the fact that the gameplay itself seems incredibly shallow. In fact so far it seems to consist of mostly walking left to right and waiting for a door to open.

Whilst the art is not bad, there is not enough variation for anything to stand out as memorable. And the noisecore track gets pretty repetitive fast. And just to add to the aggravation, the controls can also be somewhat laggy.

Honestly there are free flash games out there that deliver more gameplay so i find it very hard to recommend this one.. What is this piece of excrement? Shard-shard-shard-shard-death-shard-shard-death-shard-shard-shard-death+game over.

Explanation/goal : zero explained.

GREAT fun! O_o. I only recommend this game for a very...VERY niche playerbase. It is a terrible game, but I enjoyed playing it.

The scissor puzzle was poorly done and the space invaders stuff doesn't belong in the game. Other than that its polished, transitions well, has a good atmosphere, etc.

But its just not a good game....for anyone other than people who like to pick things apart and discover how things are suppose to work without instructions.. The Lady, an experimental game V interactive art V 4D simulator, and by that I mean depression, desolation, depersonalisation, and despair.

The game explores anxiety, misery, fear, and schizophrenia, but through a very personal point of view of its author(s), making a very clever use of symbolism; it has an uncanny feeling of healing through art, as if a psychiatrist suggested a patient to express themselves by creating this game. While it doesn't treat these subjects from a general point of view, this approach gives a sense of authenticity.

Gameplay wise, The Lady is comprised of several minimalistically-designed levels, divided in stages. Each level has a different gameplay approach, with a distinct variation for each stage, some being more traditional, while some being more explorative; the exploration parts focus more on the feeling the player has in regards to what is happening to the lady, and not necessarily to the levels themselves.

I would suggest to take the game slowly, since rushing into the stages can get you killed and you have to restart from the beginning of the level (but I decided to treat this as a "story-telling" device); furthermore, the game is short enough to finish in roughly 1h - 1h30.

Visually, the game is simplistic and repetitive, but it manages to get the message across perfectly, and the art style is exquisite. At times it reminded me of Alice: Madness Returns, as if it were a collection of mini-game out of that universe. I appreciated the atmosphere and while I'm not a fan of dark ambient or noise, I believe the sound design fits the game perfectly; some of the sound effects could have used some more work, but now I'm just nitpicking.

Overall I enjoyed the game and its superb artstyle, and consider it to be a fresh breeze of originality.

Pros:

- * art style
- * atmosphere
- * music and sound design
- * gameplay
- * originality

Cons:

- * some sound effects

Score: 7.75 V 10. And the winner of the weirdest game I've played this year is... the Lady !

This game made me feel very, very uncomfortable, moving around as an armless woman and breaking glass with my bare head. The art (drawing and sound) is particular for sure, in a creepy way, but it's not enough to make it a decent game. Mostly you just have to go to the right or the left, attacking from time to time the "things" that get in your way. And if unluckily you manage to get yourself killed, you'll have to start the whole level over.

The Lady is definitely a unique experience, just not in a positive way.. Quite accurate compared to real feel of anxiety.. You know, this game is awesome. Just awesome.

Possibly one of the weirdest games I have ever played of this era. The lady witch I wouldn't pay at its price right now just saying. It's not a bad game but unless you want to pay 5 instead of waiting for it to go on sale it might not be worth buying.. I paid $0.80 for this game....

Trust me when I say this don't waste your money on this. It's short and simplistic and there's no real hidden meaning behind half the imagery. Just creepy in a "why?" way.. Zip-a-dee doo daa..... <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DSdU56Sk4Gs> This one is down right weird!. I don't know if it's horror, but those images are strange. The entire game is actually strange and it feels hard (sounds odd I know). Anyway, for that strange art that I somehow enjoyed I'm going to give this a positive review.. well its weird game/horror/story

and something new for me

i didn't get used to play games like this i think the art/music is nice..

but not enough to me to like the game xD

i will positive the game but i don't really recommend it!! It's a cool and interesting game with a neat and fitting soundtrack.

There's some frustration and difficulty to it that adds to the tense and sometimes abrasive atmosphere to make for a pleasantly unsettling, uncomfortable experience. Well worth a couple of hours of time as a silly and fun little thing to experience.. Waste of time. 12 hours of playtime and not steam cards....
